Time For Militant Action Against the Far-Right

The far-right are in a mess. Their ideas are increasingly bizarre extreme and violent, their leaders are constantly infighting, but they are still able to get some people to follow them.

This is because there is a real crisis facing many ordinary working-class people who are trapped in a cost of living and housing crunch.

When people feel there is no effective fightback on these issues then the far-right can exploit the situation. They entice their followers to lash out at minorities and vulnerable people who are not the problem.

Now they know that a new economic crisis, caused by their billionaire allies, is on the way. They can see that this gives them a chance to spread their hate even further.

They can become a greater danger if we do not act.

That is why an alternative must be built that not only challenges the far-right but also cuts the legs from under them by taking on the issues that matter to working class communities.

Militant Left believes that the next steps in fighting back are:

- Building joined up, democratically run, anti-racist campaigns across the country that bring together anti racist campaigners, communities and trade union activists
- Taking on the issues that the far-right use to divide working class communities – Fighting for quality jobs, homes, and services for all
- Establishing effective stewarding to give people confidence that they can organise against the far-right
- Building a political voice for working class communities that fights for working class interests

It is time to take them on – Fight Racism – Fight for Working Class Unity and a Socialist Future
